

A FREE GIFT FOR THE HUMAN NOTE

The Not-Yet List

One page for the one thing you'll finish this week — and permission for everything else to stay exactly where it is.

This is not a to-do list. It is the opposite of one. Writing the unfinished things down is how you stop carrying them around all week.

One thing. Then let the rest be.

Fill this in once, at the start of the week. It takes about four minutes, and it works best written by hand.

PART ONE · THE ONE THING

What am I actually finishing this week?

Just one. If you wrote two, cross one out — that one goes in Part two.

Done looks like...

Make it smaller than you think. "Curtains hung," not "pergola finished."

PART TWO · THE NOT-YET LIST

Everything else — written down on purpose

These are not failures, and they are not late. They are simply not this week.

THEN SIGN IT

Everything on that second list has my permission to stay unfinished until I'm ready.

KEEP THIS ONE

Four things worth remembering

For the next time you catch yourself waiting to feel finished.

- Finishing one thing always reveals another.

That isn't a flaw in how you're living. It's what an engaged life looks like from the inside.

- The goalposts were always going to move.

You're allowed to stop chasing them for an afternoon. They'll still be there.

- Unfinished is not the same as failing.

Half-potted plants and a bare pergola are evidence of a life with things growing in it.

- A life in progress is still a life being lived.

You are already in the middle of the thing you keep waiting to arrive at.

IF YOU ONLY KEEP ONE LINE

Maybe the finished version was never the goal. Maybe the goal is to stop waiting for permission to enjoy the one that's happening right now.

THANK YOU FOR READING

If you fill this in, I'd love to know what your one thing was. Hit reply to any issue of The Human Note — I read every single one.
